The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-22 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Isen et al (Pat. No. 5,763,058); hereinafter Isen et al.

Isen et al teach an electrical circuit component formed of a conductor printed on a flexible substrate (Cf. Col 3). Isen et al also teach that a battery can be made having electrodes 816 and 820 and an electrolyte 818. (Cf. Cols. 11, 12 and Fig. 8) It would have been obvious to place the battery between two insulation layers if in fact Isen et al do not teach this limitation with the rationale being to provide a flexible battery with all the attributes thereof. Isen et al also teach there can be a lamination means (instead of a printing means) to laminate plastic onto a surface which has an electrically conductive pattern (Cf. Col. 8). Furthermore Isen et al teach that there can be holes (or vias) in the insulator which can connect to the electrically conductive patterns. It would have been obvious to provide a battery on an insulating layer having terminals if in fact Isen et al do not teach such a limitation since terminals are necessarily needed for the battery's operation. As applied to claim 6 it is held to be within the skill of a PHOSITA to remove a portion of the 1st insulation layer in order to create a spot for at least one battery. As further applied to claim 13 it is held to have been obvious to use a polyimide (thermoplastic) because of that material's well-known high flexibility and heat resistance. As applied to claims 21 and 22 it is held to mere design choices to provide a plurality of batteries in a single conductive layer or provide at least one battery in each of a plurality of insulating and conductive layers. N.B. that Isen et al teaching a continuous method of printing Cf Fig 5 and Col. 7). It is held that the limitations recited in said claims 21 and 22 solve no specific problem nor are for any particular purpose.

Alternatively the limitations are held to obvious in view of Isen et al.
